THE VENERABLE GEORGE ERRINGTON.

By ANN M.C. FORSTER

His family.

Foley (Records, vol. V, p.740) quotes a communication received from Lord Arundell, in which he attempts to present a pedigree of the Erringtons, but fails to show the connections of Ven. George Errington, merely stating that he "may fairly be treated as presumably a younger branch of the Erringtons of Errington." The pedigree, as given, is not quite correct, and concerns mainly the Erringtons of Walwick Grange, with whom George Errington could only have been remotely connected.

In the 16th century certainly, and probably far earlier, the Erringtons formed a sort of clan, centred round Errington, which is in the parish of St. John Lee and the manor of Hexham. They were to be found occupying holdings all over the parish. Genealogies of many different branches may be traced, and hence caution is needed in deciding where any particular Errington should be placed. Ven. George Errington was born, however, not in Hexhamshire but at Hirst,[1] in the parish of Woodhorn, which lies to the extreme east of Northumberland, bordering on the sea. It is here that the search for his family should commence.

A certain amount of information about these Erringtons of Hirst has come down to us in consequence of a dispute over property in 1608, between two members of the family, in the course of which particulars of their descent were given.[2] Thomas Errington of Hirst, holder of the property in dispute, was son and heir to a John Errington, stated to have died about 1568, and grandson of another Thomas Errington, of Beukley in the parish of St. John Lee, who in 1528 made a surrender of property to his sons. Ralph Errington of Bingfield, the claimant (who was successful in the action), was the grandson of John's elder brother. Since, as seems extremely probable, George Errington was a brother of Thomas Errington of Hirst, these particulars relate to his ancestry also.

The property in dispute in 1608 included that portion (a moiety) of Beukley[3] held by the Erringtons of Hirst. The remaining moiety was in the possession of the main branch of the family, the Erringtons of Errington[4] (afterwards of Beaufront). Thus, though the link between the Hirst branch and the main stock has not been traced, there probably was such a link, and that not too remote, since both families owned halves of the same estate.

The first mention of an Errington in the neighbourhood of Hirst occurs about the middle of the sixteenth century,[5] i.e. in the lifetime of John Errington, and possibly they had some holding in Woodhorn parish previous to their acquisition of Hirst. Hirst is known to have been in the ownership, as late as 1568, of the Ogle family, and in 1552 it was tenanted by a George Ogle, "cousin" to Robert, 5th Lord Ogle.[6] John Errington probably succeeded George Ogle about that time, as occupier, and either he or his son Thomas must have acquired Hirst from the Ogles then or subsequently. The Jacobean manorhouse which was attached to the tower is thought to have been built by Thomas. It remained in the possession of his family until the extinction of the male line, with the death of his grandson, William Errington, about 1663. Both house and tower survived until about fifty years ago, when they were demolished.[7]

"John Errington of Hirst" living in 1597,[8] was presumably another brother of Thomas and George. Luke Errington of the parish of Woodhorn, who had a brother, John, alive in 1609,[9] was possibly yet another. There was a sister, Jane, mentioned in the will of Thomas Errington in 1626.[10]

There are two mentions of a George Errington in local records, both of which may refer to George the martyr. In 1568, George and John Errington are recorded as holding lands in Beukley.[11] In 1580, the name George Errington occurs in a report made to the Privy Council by Sir John Forster, in connection with the muster of able horsemen recently held. Some men had alleged as a reason for their "unableness" the fines and raising of rents on the part of landlords. An item in the report reads: "Ellengeton, [Ellington, parish of Woodhorn], 20 tenants, whereof none able, having paid eight years fines a'piece to Gawen Claveringe, Arthur Cresswell and George Erengeton, at the leaste." [12]

Conclusions: In the absence of definite proof, there is a strong presumption that Ven. George Errington was a younger son of the John Errington whose ancestry is given above: that his family derived, some generations back, from the Erringtons of Errington, who were seized of Beukley: that John Errington was living at Hirst, though possibly not yet as owner, in 1554, (when George Errington was born), and that he died about 1568. There is no definite clue as to the identity of his wife. It is possible that she was an Ogle,[13] which would explain the descent of the property, but this is mere speculation. George Errington held property in Beukley and in Ellington.

There is no mention of George Errington in the lawsuit of 1608, but he had then been dead twelve years, and the less said about him the better. No other Errington of Hirst appears in Recusancy records. Their cousins of Bingfield (their opponents in the suit) kept the Faith for several generations.

His career.

In December, 1572, George Errington, filius generosi, of Northumberland, matriculated at Trinity College, Oxford. He was then aged eighteen. He graduated B.A. in 1576, and M.A. in 1579.[14] Whether at that time an open or latent Catholic, he must, in those years at Trinity, have come across much to confirm him in Catholicism. William Spenser, future martyr, and William Warford S.J., neither of them yet reconciled to the Church, were his contemporaries. Thomas Ford, late Fellow of Trinity, was ordained priest at Douay in 1573, and returned to the Oxford district, keeping in touch with his old college. Ten years later a group of five Trinity men were to enter the seminary at Rheims, escorted by Edward Stransham, himself a St. John's man, and a contemporary of George Errington.[15] It seems possible that the ardour, which so characterised the latter during the rest of his life, was first kindled in the intimate discussions of college circles, and afterwards fed by the knowledge that one friend after another was preparing to face poverty and peril and cross the seas in order to become a priest. There is nothing to show that he felt a similar call, or that he was adopting, or intended to adopt, any particular profession; but the life of a country gentleman, which to all appearance he was leading after his university years, may well have masked what he regarded as his true vocation – the lay apostolate, so vital if the priests returning from abroad were to be brought into contact with the people who needed them.

His first appearance in Recusant history was in 1585, when he was arrested on Tyneside on his way to France, either on the point of embarking or shortly afterwards. From his examinations taken in the Tower of London before Sir Owen Hopton and Edward Barker, the 30th and 31st August, 1585,[16] and from those of Robert Hethfield, a merchant of Newcastle, taken at the same time, it appears that he was escorting a boy, bound presumably for one of the seminaries abroad. The name of the boy is not disclosed. He had been picked up at Neville's Cross just outside Durham, brought thither by an elder brother. Present with them was a certain Miles White. George was also the bearer of letters for two Englishmen in Rouen, one called Brown, the other a Mr. Valentine Taylor,[17] a priest. Some of the letters had been given him by Hethfield, others by a certain Johnson. Being asked whether, in case her Majesty would vouchsafe to pardon him, he was willing to go to church and conform himself in matters of religion, he replied that "he would pray for and serve her Highness with his body and life, but as for going to the church, his conscience would not permit him." It is evident from this and the accompanying examinations, that he was in the habit of making these trips abroad.

Some names of interest appear in these examinations: Hawfield, "lately executed for treason:"[18] a priest named Hartlie whom Hethfield had seen "Christmas was a twelvemonth," i.e. Christmas 1583:[19] Edward Taylor, a merchant of Newcastle, in whose house Hethfield had met Errington "about a month or six weeks before his taking ship," i.e. June 1585: Nicholson,[20] with whom George Errington disclaimed acquaintance "otherwise than by the boy's naming of him."

George Errington remained in the Tower for over a year, until the 27th Aug. 1586.[21] His name then disappears from the Tower lists, but he was not released, for at the Privy Council held the 30th November 1586, his case was discussed, and it was resolved that he be "conferred with in point of religion."[22]

He was released on bail, by order of the Council, the 3rd. February, 1586/7.[23] He was then described as "of Ellington in Northumberland."[24] In 1589 more of his activities came to light as the result of information obtained in connection with two priests taken about Dover.[25] He was, it appears, the chief organiser of a reception centre at South Shields maintained in the house of a Catholic lady, a Miss Ursula Taylor. There priests and other Catholics landing from abroad found hospitality and assistance; so also young men and others making their way overseas. The finances were under the management of Lawrence Kellam, an ex-student of the English college, Rheims.[26] He was responsible for the provision of money and other things needful. George Errington, "a lusty tall gentleman, well horsed and armed," himself undertook the conveying of priests "to such gentlemen's houses as they were assigned unto."[27]

The secret route via the Tyne had been in use for some time; in fact it is probable that George had been working on it long before his apprehension in 1585.

In the April of that year the spy Nicholas Berden reported:[28] "the sayd preists moste commonly do come over in ffrench boates that come to Newcastell for Coles, whoe do lande the sayd preists either at Newcastell, or in some Creeke nere to the same;" and the following August George Errington admitted in his examination in the Tower that he "rode with the boye to the water's edge about one mile and a half from Newcastell, where the Frenchman laye and stayed for them."[29]

John Boste knew this route, and so, in 1586, did Grateley, the apostate and spy,[30] who may have betrayed it. It is possible that the Government had had their eye upon it for some time before its pretended discovery "by two priests taken about Dover."

Information of the discovery was passed on by Walsingham to the Dean of Durham, Tobie Matthew, with instructions to employ Henry Sanderson to "break up the rest of that traitorous crew." The immediate result was to compel George and his friends to disperse and make fresh arrangements. Some priests, the Dean reported, "were taken two or three together, coming into Newcastle by an unaccustomed way."[31] From this time onward, Sanderson was constantly on the trail; but it was not until early in 1591 that he "apprehended George Errington hand to hand, being their chieftain and guide, and shortly afterwards, Ursula Taylor."[32]

The circumstances attending their capture are related by Fr. Christopher Grene:[33] "1591, the 27th February: Mr. Roger Ashton,[34] gentleman, and Mr. Oliver Cotton, gentleman, born in Lancashire, and Mr. Robert Musgrave, gentleman, born in the north, attempted to take ship at Shields, or thereabout, near Newcastle, was by a contrary wind after certain days sailing brought back again to Shields, and there apprehended on the 27th of February, and brought back to Durham, and there committed. About the 2nd of March after, was Mrs. Ursalie Taylor, a maid, taken for harbouring them, and committed to Newcastle gaol close prisoner, as the rest were. About the 12th or 13th day of April following they were brought to York Castle from Durham, and Mrs. Ursalie and Sir George Williams, a seminary priest, with them, by the under sheriff of the shire. But so soon as the Council heard of them they sent for them and committed them to several places that day; Mr. Roger Ashton to the Kidcott, Mr. Cotton to Alderman Jackson's, Mr. Musgrave to the Palace, Mrs. Ursula Taylor to Peter Prison, and Sir George to the Castle, all closely to be kept."

Fr. Grene does not seem to have known where or when George Errington was captured, merely stating: "The 22nd May the Council and Mr. Topcliffe sent for

Mr. George Errington, who was taken in the north, as I think, and committed to the Council by Dear, the pursuivant. After they had examined him they sent him back again close prisoner" to York Castle. Sir George Williams was similarly treated.

Two days later, on the 24th May, Mr. Errington was examined again, and also the three young men who had been taken going abroad. On the 22nd June, Ursula Taylor was removed from Peter Prison to the Castle, "where she sustained great hardness by herself alone without comfort of any company in a darksome place without fire and oftentimes water and other necessaries, by reason the keeper dwelt otherwhere far off; yet meekly she did take all for Christ's sake and the Catholic faith." Later she was transferred to the South Blockhouse, Hull, and eventually released on bail, the 28th December, 1594.[35]

George Errington possibly took his troubles with less meekness, or it may be that he realised the importance of his rôle, and the need to be back at his post at the earliest possible moment. From Fr. Grene's next extract we learn: "1591, the 4th December, in the evening, Sir George Williams, a Seminary priest and a Welshman born, Mr. George Errington . . . went both away from the Castle, to the great trouble, discredit and disquietness of the Catholic prisoners, who were locked up and abridged of their former liberty." Where George spent his Christmas we do not know, but for a year and a half he was at liberty. In the mass prosecution of Catholics which took place 1591-92, we find indications that he was being sought after. " —— Errington of Buckley" was among those convicted at Newcastle, in July, 1592.[36] (This was probably his cousin, Ralph Errington of Bingfield, later the successful claimant in the suit over Beukley.) Elizabeth Errington of Ogle Castle also was convicted. George had found shelter in Durham county, and it was there that the spy Anthony Atkinson picked up his tracks. He reported:[37]

"Metcalfe a preist said Mass att ye Waterhouse[38] att one Claxton's house a recusant who is in prison, and y^{r} were present att ye Mass ye 12 and 13 of Julye, 1593, George Errington, Nycholas Bridges, Francis Englisfeild and many others.

"Boost [John Boste] did say Mass att ye Waterhouse ye vth day of August 1593 in y^{t} company.

"Upon Thursday ye 30th of August Davy Englebye[39] and George Errington ded harber all night at one Wilfride Lee house in Bushoprick.[40]

"The Vth September, 1593, Davy Englebye, Thomas York, William Norton and two others not knowne, rode by peares brige, and had everye man a case of pistols."

Through the agency of Anthony Atkinson and by the treachery of Francis Englisfield, the priest John Boste was captured at the Waterhouse, the 10th September, 1593. George Errington was taken shortly afterwards.

To return to Fr. Grene: "About the 6th of November, ... brought before the President and Council [at York] . . . . two young men, brought forth of Bishopric, there taken, and Mr. George Errington. The young men were committed to the Castle and Mr. George to the pursuivants. The one of them called Spence . . . . was at Durham arraigned and condemned and so executed 1594 in the Lent time, because he would not accuse his master and other Catholics for priests harboring. The other young man was called Nicholas Bridges; and falling sick, his friends got him forth upon bond, and after it was said he fell."

Something may be said at this point regarding these associates of George Errington. Spence was B. John Spede, martyred at Durham the 4th February, 1594. While in prison at York he caused his fellow-prisoner William Ogle[41] to write in his name to Miles White of Durham, asking him to warn one Brasse and his wife to keep silent with regard to his having brought the priest Metcalfe to their house. The letter was intercepted and betrayed to the President. Brasse and Taylor confessed that he had brought Mr. Metcalfe to their houses, but said they did not know him to be a priest.

Miles White of Durham was associated with George Errington as far back as 1585, when he saw him off to France in company with the boy. It looks as though, after the present incident, he conformed. Miles White his son (or grandson) appears as a recusant in 1628.[42]

Nicholas Bridges [Briggs], one of those present at Mass at the Waterhouse, was of Haram in the same parish (Brancepeth). He appears no more in recusant records, but his wife, Isabel daughter of Thomas Batmanson of Brome Hall, Durham, remained staunchly recusant.[43]

It would seem then, that during his interval of freedom, George Errington was operating in the north western corner of Durham county, the parishes of Lanchester and Brancepeth. On some occasions he was in the company of B. John Boste; but his own particular charge seems to have been the Rev. Anthony Metcalfe vere Hebburn.[44] This was the son of Anthony Hebburn of Hardwick in the parish of Sedge-field, and Anne, daughter of Robert Tempest of Holmeside, parish of Lanchester. He was later one of the Appellant priests.

We resume the story from Fr. Grene's MSS.: "The 7th November Mr. George Errington was brought to the Castle by a pursuivant from the Council, and called before the President and Council again the 16th of November was examined.

"1594, the 16th of July Mr. Bost and Mr. George Errington were sent pinioned to Durham from York Castle."

George Errington was sent on to Newcastle, and confined for ten days in the Newgate prison. B. John Ingram also was imprisoned there, for the four nights preceding his trial, which was held at Durham, the 23rd July.[45] On that day John Boste, John Ingram, and a layman, George Swallowell, were condemned to death. Their executions took place on the 24th, 26th and 29th July. George Errington, for some reason, possibly for lack of evidence, was not brought to trial with them, but sent back to York, where he remained.

The final episode of his life, which brought him the glory of martyrdom, is related by Dr. Challoner.[46] A fellow-prisoner, posing as a would-be Catholic, begged for the ministrations of a priest. George Errington, together with his companions, William Knight, William Gibson, Anne Teshe and Bridget Maskew, directed him to Henry Abbot, outside the prison, who endeavoured to put him in touch with a priest. The wretched man gave information, and all six were sentenced to death for "persuading,"[47] the men to be hanged, drawn and quartered, the women to be burnt alive. The latter were reprieved; George Errington, William Knight and William Gibson suffered together at York, the 29th November, 1596. Henry Abbot[48] followed them seven months later.

19. This, presumably, was B. William Hartley. If so, Hethfield must have seen him in prison, for the 5 Dec. 1585 Bishop Aylmar reported: "I have been so bold as to shutt up one Hartley and laye irons on him." He remained in prison till the 15th Jan. following, when he was shipped abroad. Both William Hartley and Thomas Alfield had been connected with the disseminating of literature, and the disquiet felt by the Government over this contraband trade is revealed in these examinations.

25. Probably BB. Francis Dickenson and Miles Gerard. They left Rheims 31 Aug. 1589 (N.S.), and encountering a heavy storm, were shipwrecked off the coast of Kent, and there captured. There need be no suggestion that the information which led to the discovery of the house at Shields was obtained from them. Tobie Matthew stated that it was discovered "by two seminary priests taken about Dover;" but cf. Challoner (op. cit. p.162) "They escaped to the shore, where they met with a more violent storm, for being immediately apprehended upon suspicion or the information of some of the ship's crew . . ." etc. Possibly they had been bound for the Tyne; at all events, it was at Newcastle upon Tyne that the Rev. George Williams, who had left Rheims in company with the two martyrs, was eventually discovered and apprehended, seven months later. (Foley, III,743).

These are not Northumbrian names. It looks as though the underground route carried well away to the west.

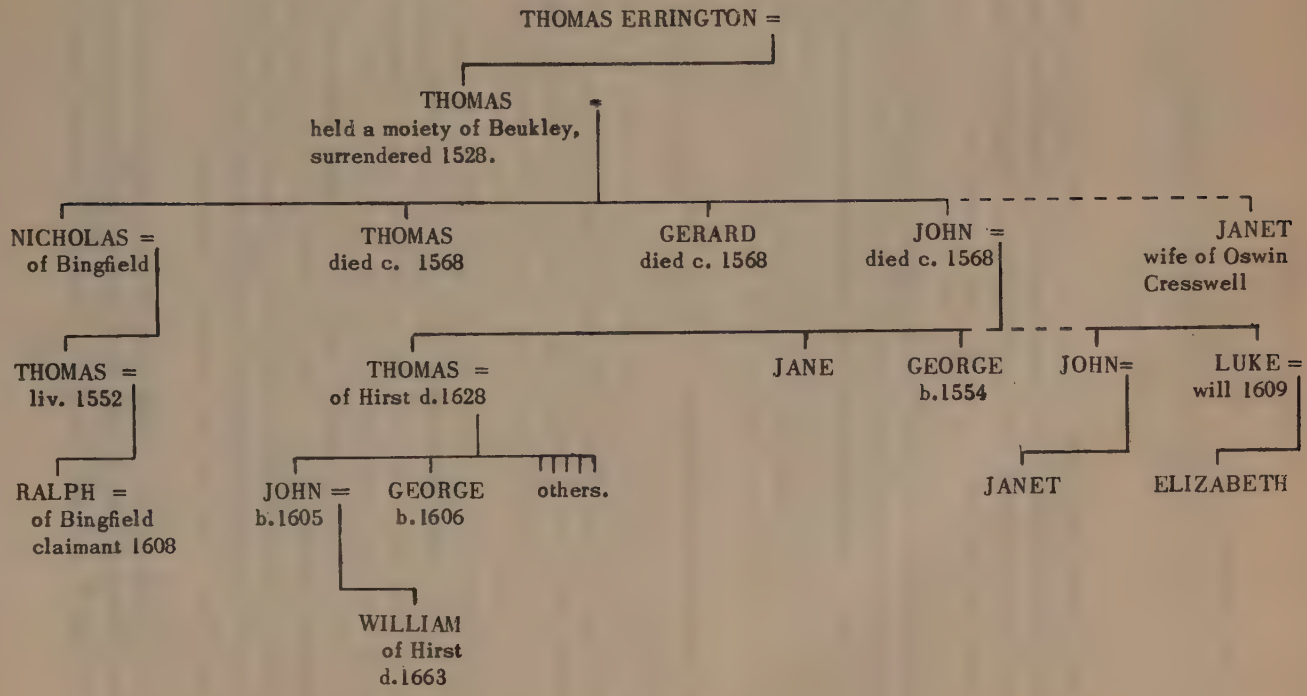
ERRINGTONS of BEUKLEY and HIRST.



THE VENERABLE THOMAS PYLCHER

By R.H. D'ELBOUX

In the Sussex County Magazine of May 1942, the Reverend L.E. Whatmore gave an account of "Thomas Pilchard of Battle (1557-87)," Elizabethan martyr of Dorchester. There is no doubt that this martyr's name was Thomas Pylcher, and that his alias of Pilchard was adopted to serve the west country area of his apostolate.

Father Whatmore, in dealing with his life,[1] gave nothing of his ancestry save that he was born in Battle, Sussex. The parish of Battle, termed a vicarage and deanery, was, like the Abbey, exempt from episcopal jurisdiction, and held its own court for, inter alia, the proving of wills. All those proved before the suppression of the abbey are lost, but wills proved after, dating from 1530 to 1617, are preserved at the Lewes registry office.[2]

There are nine Pylcher wills, from which a sketch pedigree of some definition can be constructed.

The will of Luke Pylcher, dated 1.VI.1547, mentions his sons Laurens, Davy and Thomas, his daughters Johane, Alyce, Agnes, Ayarse and Margaret, and wife Alyce, who is executrix, with Ambrose Comport (the abbey bailiff) as supervisor.

The will of Alce Pylcher, his widow, dates 26.1.1558-59, mentions Alce, daughter of Lawrence Pylcher, then under twenty, Thomas Pylcher and Thomas Pylcher the younger, David Pylcher her executor, who receives the residue after bequests, and "everyone of my four (sic) daughters"; as before Ambrose Comport is supervisor. Alce Jefferay is mentioned; she was a daughter who married Bartholomew Gefferay of Buckholt in Bexhill (see Visitation of Sussex, 1530 and 1633, Harleian Society, p.56). The following are also mentioned:- Richard Jefferay, Richard and James Cecyley (a local Sussex name), Mary Pylcher, Richard Skynner, and Alce Durand. In both wills one deduces David to have been the eldest son.

The will of Thomas Pylcher, dated 20.II.1571 (not 1572 as stated in British Record Society, Sussex Wills, Vol.XXIV. p.444) mentions three daughters, Mary, Allyce, and Elizabeth and an unborn child; his wife is Elizabeth, and his lands, for want of issue, are to go to the eldest son of his brother Lawrence; supervisors, Thomas Alfrey (who married Ambrose Comport's daughter and succeeded him as bailiff of the manor of Battle) and Richard Watts (whose representatives, through the Distaff, still dwell in Battle).

The will of Elizabeth, late wife of Thomas Pylcher, dated 13.III.1573, mentions her daughters Mary, Alice, and Elizareth, and leaves the residue to Thomas Pylcher her son, who is executor, with the supervisors as in her husband's will.

This Thomas, unmentioned in the father's will, cannot be the martyr born about 1557, since he is of age and an executor in 1573.[3] Nor is the eldest son of Lawrence a likely identification, since a daughter only is assigned to him in 1558-59 by Mrs. Luke Pylcher, who was free with her bequests, and so unlikely to omit a grandson.

The will of David Pylcher is dated 10.III.1576-77. He is the one of most standing in the family, owning lands in Hooe, and Capenowar and other lands in Battle.

Chapenore[4] occurs in the chronicle of Battle Abbey, and, moreover, in the first part, which from internal evidence appears to date from the first quarter of the twelfth century. There it is estimated as 15 acres. In 1422 as Capenore, its rent is given as appropriated to the Almoner of Battle,[5] so its tenure by David Pylcher was possibly a minor piece of monastic spoliation.

The site of Capenore was identified independently for me as on Tanyard Hill in Battle, and above the present tanyard. Fr. Whatmore, in his article on the mission at Battle,[6] states the martyr's father to have been a tanner, but for this I have been unable to find any evidence.

David Pylcher mentions his (presumably eldest) son Thomas who is to have the Battle lands, and sons John and Luke; daughters Anne, Mercye, and Constance; appoints his brothers William and Thomas Hay executors, and Dr. Wythens, Dean of Battle and Mr. Thomas Alfray, bailiff, overseers, Amongst the witnesses are Edmund Pelham[7] and Anthony Lowe.

It should be noted that both Dr. Wythens and Mr. Edmund Pelham were cited in a document endorsed 1596[8] as "very backward in religion" and religion in Battle described as "greatly decayed." Since even in 1569 the town is mentioned as "the most popish town in all Sussex," it is obvious that protestantism had never gained much foothold.

David Pylcher had presumably married a Hay, an armigerous Battle family of some standing. William Hay was demandant of a deed of recovery at the court of Battle in 1590.[9] Thomas Haye married Elizabeth, daughter of John Baker of Battle; he died in 1591 and she in 1597; both had brasses at the church, and her inscription still remains there. The Bakers, like the Alfrayes, were concerned with local Iron-works.

It is David's son, Thomas, one finds likeliest as the martyr. As the eldest son, later destined to inherit Capenore, a Hay on his mother's side, he is the most likely to be sent to the University, and so made, ipso facto, a gentleman. In 1576 he was Fellow of Balliol, a college with strong Catholic connections, so his two uncles act as executors in Battle. It is possible that even then he was a more or less open Catholic, and the prudent father chose executors not able to be invalidated by law. Thomas's brother Luke's will is dated 20.VI.1583 and proved 23.VII.1583; in it there is mention of John Pylcher their brother, and brothers William Howell and William French, the latter with a daughter Helen, but no mention of Thomas, who had been ordained priest at Laon that year.

There remain a few wills outside this pedigree. John Pylcher, alias Bernying, Clerk, in will dated 29.VIII,1540, mentions Luke Pylcher, whose will is first mentioned in this article, but states no relationship. Thomas Pylcher, in will dated 26.II.1543-44, may have been brother to Luke; there is no indication. He has sons Richard, Thomas and Luke, all under twenty-two, and daughters Elizabeth and Julyan, both under twenty; Alyce his wife, and his brother in law, John Love the younger, are executors.

And lastly Thomas Pylcher, in will of 1.IV.1550, mentions his wife Katherine, his daughter Johan, and his brother's son John Pylcher. His lack of offspring suggests he died young, and he may have been the son of Thomas of 1543-44,

It is noteworthy that Luke Pylcher, his wife Alice, and John Pylcher the Cleric are all buried in the church, whereas the last two Thomas Pylchers are buried in the churchyard, which suggests they belonged to a less important branch of the family.

My thanks are particularly due to Mr. W.H. Challen, who freely extracted for me the relevant details of these wills, and to the Reverend L.E. Whatmore for constant advice and encouragement.

1. The following reference escaped him: Foley's Records Vol.2, p.720, "The Lady West, of Winchester, keepeth amongst others, Pilcher alias Foster"; and on p.722, "Pilcher alias Forster yet at Liberty." These date from 1583, and refer to the martyr's first return as a priest.

3. There is a will of Thomas Pilcher 1593, of Battle, Sussex and Ashford, Kent (P.C.C. 57 Nevell) which I have not examined.
